

»Excerpted Praise for Junk Science

»These are the type of artists you can only hope for, ones who will push the limits of what hip-hop artists can or should talk about. When current media darling Kanye West dropped 'Jesus Walks' a while back, it shocked everyone because it was 'too real'. I can only hope Junk Science's "House Wigger" real talk catches on too.

- HIP HOP SITE.COM

»We were up on Nuclear Family members Baje One and DJ Snafu before they cleaned up some Scion contest, got their video made by Andrew Gura (MF DOOM, Madlib) and dropped this superb record of simple times raps and beats. Now its everyone else's turn to know.

- URB

»Baje One has a scope that defies any stereotype of white rappers. On Feeding Einstein, the Brooklynite's fluid rhymes seamlessly fit DJ Snafu's earthy production, a style that has the nose of a crate digger yet sticks to the traditional kick-snare thunk... Junk Science comes correct with a no-bullshit attitude.

- XLR8R

»Junk Science get busy with regular-dude stories, the sort of stuff you dont need piles of cash to relate to... If these cats remain in hip hop's underground, it isn't their fault.

- TIME OUT NEW YORK

»A highly listenable gem of an independent Hip Hop album... Their style combines the silly and the earnest, Baje One's relaxed storytelling and thoughtful commentary with Snafu's symphonies of layered beats and samples, a blend of old school breaks with satisfying bass lines.

- SPITKICKERS.COM

»Somewhere along the way independent Hip-Hop in New York went and gained some steam, and we're beginning to see why... Melodic emcee Baje One matches wit and personality with versatility and wordplay, while producer DJ Snafu lays down harder-than-Debo drums and swirling, atmospheric samples; killing it with that lethal combination platter over a rarely faltering 14 proper tracks.

- ALLHIPHOP.COM

»Feeding Einstein crams (omitted) samples, gospel chorals, wind chimes and more into its Cookie Monster maw, garnishes the gumbo with Baje Ones confident poetics and ends up with an album that's both banging and boundary-pushing.

- CMJ NEW MUSIC

»Pleasurable from beginning to end... Feeding Einstein works motherfucking wonders.
